

Dog Care, Health & Nutrition

Through evolution, the bodies of dogs and cats have superbly adapted to maintain health on the foods that were most easily available to them in the wild. These would have been raw foods, also known as a biological diet.

It goes without saying that the foods our pets' bodies have evolved to thrive on throughout millions of years are not the processed commercial foods of the last fifty years.

Look inside your dog or cat's mouth. Their teeth are designed for tearing into flesh, not tearing into kibble.

Natural, raw foods set up and maintain healthy, natural biochemical reactions. These biochemical reactions set up a natural line of defense - a healthy immune system - that fights off bacteria, viruses, and parasites many times a day.

So by restoring your pet to his natural, health-giving diet, you can restore the myriad natural biochemical reactions that give strength to his immune system. This is the .magic. that keeps pets who are fed natural diets free of today's .inevitable. diseases.